Robert C. Feenstra is a professor of economics at the University of California, Davis. He holds a B.A. from the University of British Columbia, Canada, earned in 1977, and a Ph.D. in economics from MIT, received in 1981. Since 1986, Feenstra has taught international trade at both undergraduate and graduate levels at UC Davis, where he also holds the C. Bryan Cameron Distinguished Chair in International Economics. Feenstra is affiliated with the National Bureau of Economic Research as a research associate, overseeing the International Trade and Investment research program. Notably, he is the author of Offshoring in the Global Economy and Product Variety and the Gains from Trade (MIT Press, 2010). His academic contributions have been recognized through awards such as the Bernhard Harms Prize from the Institute for World Economics, Kiel, Germany, in 2006, and delivering the Ohlin Lectures at the Stockholm School of Economics in 2008. Feenstra's work on international economics seamlessly integrates classic theory with empirical evidence. He places a strong emphasis on connecting established core content with emerging ideas from recent studies, reflecting the evolving nature of global economies. His text on international economics is available in various versions to suit different courses' needs, including an essentials version for one-term courses. Feenstra's academic credentials and contributions make him a prominent figure in his field, recognized internationally for his work in international trade and investment. Alan M. Taylor is a professor of economics at the University of California, Davis. He resides in Davis, California, with his wife Gail, and has two grown children. Taylor holds a B.A. from King's College, Cambridge, and earned his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1992. Since 1999, he has taught international macroeconomics, growth, and economic history at UC Davis. He is also a research associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research.
